

Filming Guidelines

You can take as much footage of your adventures on the rally as you like for your own personal uses, no worries – it's great to have video footage of the pickles you will no doubt find yourself in and it will be a cracking watch in 50 years time when you're too old to be trusted with a Nissan Micra down the high street.

We are chatting to some TV types about doing a documentary of next year's rally, which we want to be about you the teams. As you know there was a doco made about young Mr Osbourne on the 2007 rally so next year we'd like it to be about you. Getting a proper professional production made on this scale will take a little while to sort out but we'll give you a shout as soon as we know something concrete.

There's nothing stopping you from making your own film about your team's Mongol Rally, in fact I would recommend it – make sure you video the shit bits too and the stuff you think will embarrassing, that's the good stuff when you watch it back in the real world.

If you want to do anything commercial with your footage, like get it shown on the telly, or use it in some kind of commercial campaign for advertising and all that caper, you need to run it past HQ first to make sure it doesn't conflict with anything that's being planned for the overall rally.

It's the same deal with the sponsorship, we want to be able to say yes to everything and will always do our best to support your ideas and help you out if you need it. But we really need to know in advance to work it all out. If we don't know plans in advance it can get tricky later down the line if there are conflicts between two projects.

(More next page)

For details on the agreement with the event organisers about media stuff, see the Team Entry Agreement.

All this doesn't mean that you can't do it; we love the Mongol Rally being on telly, we just need to be contacted first to make sure it's OK. If you have any questions just give us a shout on info@mongolrally.com